Body

I. Findings and Purpose.

WHEREAS, 65 million Americans--that is, 1 in 4 adults--have a criminal record; and

WHEREAS, Newark, the largest city in the state of New Jersey, with a population of more than 280,000, reportedly has the highest per capita number of parolees of any U.S. city; and

WHEREAS, in 2010, Newark was 52.4% Black, 33.8% Latino, and 11.6% Non-Hispanic White; and

WHEREAS, an arrest, without any conviction, can serve as a barrier to employment and housing, resulting in punishment of the innocent; and

WHEREAS, more than 1,700 individuals return to Newark from state prison annually and an additional 1,400 Newark residents are released from the Essex County Correctional Facility every month; and

WHEREAS, similar to many urban jurisdictions, more than 6,500 Newark residents are under Federal Probation, State Parole or County Probation at any given time; and

WHEREAS, 3,885 Essex County residents were in New Jersey Department of Corrections custody in 2010, representing sixteen percent of the total incarcerated population; and

WHEREAS, many more Newark and Essex County residents who are or have been involved in the criminal justice system have been sentenced to probation and were never incarcerated; and

WHEREAS, formerly incarcerated men with a criminal record can expect to lose $100,000 in income across their prime earning years; and

WHEREAS, the American Bar Association identified over 38,000 statutes imposing collateral consequences on individuals with a criminal record, many which de-incentivize work and responsibility that promote public safety; and

WHEREAS, a recent report on these collateral barriers ranked New Jersey as the 44th worst state, meaning it had more statutes creating collateral consequences than all but six states; and

WHEREAS, ninety-five percent of people admitted to prison eventually return to their communities of origin; and

WHEREAS, an estimated 62% of those returning to Newark will be re-arrested, re-convicted, or re-incarcerated within three years of their release; and

WHEREAS, as of 2008, Blacks, Latinos and Whites made up, respectively, 39.2%, 33.3%, 20.6% of the prison population; and

WHEREAS, two-thirds of people returning to their communities from prison are racial minorities, compared to one third of the general population; and

WHEREAS, criminal background checks by employers have increased dramatically in recent years, with estimates of ninety percent of large employers in the U.S. now conducting background checks as part of the hiring process; and

WHEREAS, commercially run criminal background checks commonly contain errors and inaccuracies and even FBI background checks are out of date fifty percent of the time; and

WHEREAS, as of March 2012, the overall unemployment rate in Newark was 14.5%. Nationally, in April 2012 the overall unemployment rate was 8.1%. The unemployment rate for Blacks was 13%; and

WHEREAS, barriers to employment and housing based on criminal records disproportionately affect racial and ethnic minorities; and

WHEREAS, many individuals with criminal records represent a group of job seekers, ready to compete for employment and contribute to society; and

WHEREAS, finding and securing adequate housing is one of the most difficult reentry challenges faced by formerly incarcerated persons; and

WHEREAS, the need for housing is both immediate and long-term; it begins immediately upon release from prison when individuals turn to temporary housing options, and becomes more urgent as formerly incarcerated individuals seek a suitable long-term housing option; and

WHEREAS, individuals with access to stable housing are less likely to be re-incarcerated than prisoners with no place to go upon release; and

WHEREAS, homelessness is prevalent among people released from prison and jail. One-tenth of individuals entering prisons have recently been homeless; at least as many of those who leave prisons also end up homeless; and

WHEREAS, access to stable housing options--public housing, affordable housing, private rental housing, and transitional and supportive housing-is limited or unavailable to formerly incarcerated persons; and

WHEREAS, federal and local housing authorities' laws regarding eligibility for public housing frequently exclude the formerly incarcerated from federally subsidized housing; and

WHEREAS, even without restrictions on eligibility for public housing assistance, federally subsidized housing is unlikely to meet the immediate or long-term needs of the formerly incarcerated. Studies estimate that only one-third of all eligible individuals and families actually gain access to public housing units or housing choice vouchers. In Newark, the waiting period for the Housing Choice Voucher Program is exceptionally long--10 years; and

WHEREAS, affordable housing is scarce, and former prisoners often return to communities with more severe shortages of affordable housing. This is a major obstacle, as individuals released from prison and jail have difficulty finding and maintaining employment, and because of limited work histories, will likely end up with jobs that provide low incomes; and

WHEREAS, private-market rental housing is closed to many individuals transitioning from prison or jail because landlords are unwilling to rent to people with criminal records, whether for arrest or conviction; and

WHEREAS persons with criminal records are not a protected class and are therefore susceptible to wide ranging discrimination based on their criminal record when seeking housing, irrespective of the severity of their crime, the time elapsed since committing the crime or evidence of rehabilitation; and

WHEREAS screening tenants for apartments based on criminal records disproportionately affects racial and ethnic minorities, which could provide evidence of numerous violations of Title VIII based on disparate impact; and

WHEREAS the Supreme Court's ruling in Alexander v. Sandoval strips individuals of the right to pursue a private cause of action for disparate impact and since there has been a lack of disparate impact litigation brought forth by federal agencies, these persons have no recourse to bring Title VIII claims; and

WHEREAS, landlords routinely conduct criminal background checks for apartment applicants, and those with criminal histories are the most likely to be rejected; and

WHEREAS, returning prisoners must overcome many barriers to access rental housing in the private market, including affordability, stigma of criminal history, unwillingness of landlords to consider them for tenancy, and community objection due to public safety concerns, whether well founded or not;

WHEREAS, securing employment and stable housing significantly reduces the risk of recidivism; and

WHEREAS, the removal of obstacles to employment and housing for people with prior convictions increases public health and safety by providing economic and social opportunities to a large group of people living in Newark; and

WHEREAS, the costs to New Jersey citizens and the people of New Jersey in terms of incarceration tops out at an estimated $48,000 per year; and

WHEREAS, the cycle of arrest, incarceration and recidivism is detrimental to the community, contributing to unemployment and family destabilization, and disrupting the economic and social fabric of communities; and

WHEREAS, it is the intent and purpose of this law to assist the successful reintegration of formerly incarcerated people into the community by removing barriers to gainful employment and stable housing after their release from prison; and

WHEREAS, at the time of this Article's passage, at least 30 cities, counties, and states have passed ordinances and statutes or enacted policies to remove barriers to the employment of those with criminal histories by public and private employers; and

WHEREAS, it is the intent and purpose of this law to enhance the health and security of the community by assisting people with criminal convictions in reintegrating into the community and providing for their families.
